Are you at risk?

Lung cancer screening looks for cancer in people who are at high risk before symptoms appear, when it may be easier to treat. Smoking is the leading cause of lung cancer, but not all people who develop the disease are smokers. Some may be exposed to second-hand smoke, may work in industries that expose them to carcinogens and some may be exposed to radon in their home. The recommended screening for lung disease is a low-dose CT scan. Make an appointment today, physician referral is not necessary.
